

If I was in charge of the world, what would I do? Well, there are many things I would do. Numerous things would change. However, most of the adjustments are not for my benefit, but for the world's benefit. Want to know exactly what are some of the things I would do? If you do, keep reading.

First, if I was in charge, the most important thing is to make sure is that the world is stable and not at war with each other. I can't be in command of humankind while humans clash with themselves. I want my planet to be in peace. There would be no battles between ourselves, killing at least dozens, not including the innocent. If there would a conflict, then I would settle it immediately. There would still be armies, but it would be one huge military, split between the countries, serving their country, but also for me. The countries would have the same names, and they would have smaller leaders to make sure the laws are carried out. The citizens of the country, or smaller division would elect their sub-leader, but I would have the final say. These leaders would report to me. The laws would basically be the same. No killing, kidnapping, stealing, arson, etc. There would also be the smaller laws that vary from country to country. Any law can be made by the countries, as long as it doesn't interfere with an international law. If someone were to break a law, their punishment would be based on the crime. The person accused of crime would have a fair trial. I want the world I would rule to be in peace, with as less crime as possible.

As if for daily life for the people, there would be only a few changes. Some major holidays aren't days off, like other minor holidays. On all major holidays, schools will be off, and you can take that day off from work without it being counted as a vacation day. Several other holidays would also be celebrated. All languages can be spoken. The metric unit would now be used all over the globe, seeing it's used in most countries. The currency would be changed to US dollars. Many are always looking to move to another country, especially to the US, but cannot because the strict policies. I would lighten up the rules so it's easier to move. The people would also be free to practice whatever religion they want. There will not be anything like a holocaust, terrorism, or genocide, and if anything like that were to be practiced, they would be stopped immediately.

The environment would also need to be saved. I would make sure there would be scientists to make energy efficient vehicles, along with the factories to make them. Fossil fuels would be now be used only during extreme cases. All sorts of new fuels would be used, from nitrogen, to carbon,  $H_2O$ , etc. Not only would this help the environment, making this possible would also help give people jobs. Once enough new vehicles are made, I would make sure that cars using fossil fuels are no longer used. Along with new cars, I would work lowering the  $CO_2$  amounts in the atmosphere. One of the main ways this would be accomplished is by planting more trees and other plants. Endangered species would be given even more protection. I would also look for a way to get rid of the continually growing trash. Littering would be illegal, and if anyone were to do it, then the minimum punishment would be a huge fine, or maybe spending some time in prison. There are countless other things that would need to be fixed to help the environment, and only a few can be fixed, or at least starting to be fixed, during my rule, but I help show the way for whoever precedes my rule.

The economy also needs to be helped. I would help bail out the companies that are needed, but after they get back into shape, they must either pay back, or help other companies. Along with the companies, I'd attempt to bring the stocks again. As if for the middle class, if the bailout still does not help them, then I would help create new jobs to help them, several given here. Many other things need to be done, like health care, but these are few of the major things.

I'd also set a team of scientists and engineers to work on sending people to other planets for exploration. While working on that, another team would be working on making it possible to live on the moon. That way, it would be less crowded on Earth. Both of these projects would probably take many years to succeed, but it would be worth it.

As the ruler, I've got to have my fun, especially since I'm still a kid. I would have a huge mansion, maybe located in Pennsylvania, with everything environment-friendly, with fields and some trees to sit under. I would get all video game systems, topped with all the best games. I'd have a home theater system, with the biggest library of movies you could find. I'd have almost every music album you could think of, with a music player big enough to hold it all, but it would probably take a few to fit it all. I'd have a big pool, no, make that two. One that goes twelve feet deep and a kiddie pool, with another pair inside so I could still swim during winter. There would also be a gym. I'd have chefs make the best of food. I'd invite all my friends to chill when I'm not busy. Although I don't like it, I would continue school. Seeing that I probably wouldn't be able to go to my old school with my friends because of security reasons, I'd bring them over with me to study, if they want, of course. After all, it is scientifically proven that you do better in school with classmates, rather than yourself. I'd continue playing the piano, and start learning the guitar. With other old friends, we'd form a band, which I'd be a part of during my free time. I'd also continue playing soccer. Of course, my family could have whatever they want too. I'd continue living just like I did before, and act as if my family just became rich because of me, and of course, then I'd remember I'm the leader of the human race, and that I can't shrug off my duties.

These are some of the things I would do if I was in charge of the world. From helping the humanity and environment, to sustaining peace, I'd do everything in my power to help the planet. There are many other things I would do, but these are some of the major things, because there's no way I could fit it all here in this essay. But here's the important thing; the people's safety comes before my safety. But hey, the leader has to have some fun too, but only when I have free time. Every one of my actions would have a consequence, but I would make sure are for the good of the people.
